AFRICAN CULTURAL STUDIES

100 Introduction to African Cultural Expression (3 credits)
What is African cultural studies? This course introduces undergraduates to the study of African and African-diaspora cultural expression as it is practiced in the Department of African Cultural Studies. The course will feature lectures by ACS faculty and advanced graduate students, who will present introductory portraits of their respective research areas and the subdisciplines to which they are attached. Topics will range from literary analysis to the study of African languages and discourse; contemporary media (e.g., film, cartoons, journalism, web-based forms) to performance genres (music, sports, theater). Through an introduction to these many areas of inquiry, students will gain a new understanding of Africa and the African diaspora as cultural fields, together with an appreciation of the many theories and theoretical concepts—cultural circulation, colonialism, neoliberalism, religion, aesthetics, race, indigeneity—employed to analyze them.

202 Representations of Africans in the Diaspora (3 credits)
In this course, you will consider representations of people of African descent within and beyond Africa. You will discuss and write about identity and identification, race and ethnicity, mobility and access, home and away, as well as current issues such as migration and xenophobia. The overall purpose of this course is to explore plural and diverse portrayals of diasporic Africans; consider how scholars in various disciplines (e.g. literature, anthropology, history) make sense of these accounts and represent people of African descent; and to think about how the issues these writers take up relate to your own lives (e.g. your personal experiences, issues in your own society, etc.).

204 Language, Mobility, and Globalization: African Migrants’ Experience (3 credits)
African migrants’ experience is not only reflected in the history of their movement across diverse spaces on the globe, it is also shaped by language, an important component of their identities. This course invites you to explore language as a symbolic and mobile resource with which Africans engage, and construct their movements, identities, and interactions across global spaces. We will explore scholarly works on language, mobility, and globalization and connect the narratives as depicted by these scholars with selected works of 21st-century African writers. We will also examine the theme of travel and return, and the process by which African migrants use language as a tool to construct their experiences of migration, globalization, diaspora, linguistic imperialism, sociolinguistic and cultural identifications. Building on your understanding of the course content, you will develop a research project through effective use of library resources, oral presentation of your work, and writing multiple drafts of your paper following the academic writing conventions in the humanities.

302 Arabic Literature And Cinema (3 credits)
(Cross listed: INTL ST 302)
An introduction of the most significant topics of contemporary Arabic literature and cinema: the legacy of colonialism, repressive nature of post-independence regimes, discourses on nationalism, religion v. secularization, gender relations, representation of cultural otherness, and the Arab Springs. Course materials will be drawn from a variety of cultural forms including literature, film, music, and performance; and scholarship, exploring the social, cultural, political, and economic contexts in which texts and films are written and exhibited. That said, I would be cautious about understanding this course as a comprehensive "survey" of Arabic literature and cinema: it is more accurately a "sampling." And because these books and films, and their cultures are fairly unfamiliar, we will move slowly through them, taking time to reflect on our own process of reading.

405 Islam in Africa & the Diaspora (3 credits)
(Cross listed: RELIG ST 400)
In New Muslim Cool, African American Muslim anthropologist Su’ad Abdul Khabeer argues that Africa is rarely understood “as an archive for Islamic authenticity and authority.” This course asks how our understanding of Islam might change by exploring that under-examined archive. Focused on close readings of ethnographies, fiction, films, and other forms of cultural expression, we will examine the practice of Islam and representation of Muslims in Africa and the Diaspora. By pairing primary and secondary sources, we will explore themes of not just authenticity and authority but also related issues of representation, positionality, difference, otherness, essentialism, normativity, and queerness. Ultimately, you will come away with a deeper understanding of the diversity and complexity of Islam and Muslims.

905 Rethinking Development: Capitalism, Pan Africanism and the Plantationocene (3 credits)
Development, a policy word used by radical reformers and economists alike, is fraught with contradictions. What role does technology play in accounting for it? Since the inception of the World Bank, Africa’s nations have languished at the bottom ranks of its human and economic metrics. Sixty years into the independence era, who is to blame? More importantly, what can be done? How can Africa’s successes with COVID19 serve as a model? This course attempts to assess approaches to improved African livelihoods through the concept of “human development” as it used in African Studies, international aid policy, anthropological, and practitioner literature. Since the early 2000s, the acronym ICT4D has fascinated development scholars and NGO-workers, with the premise that the broad adoption of information and communication technologies (ICT) could allow Africa to “leapfrog” past the Industrial Era into the Age of Techné. China has also emerged as counter-veiling force to Europe in Africa’s development politics. But whether through gold, socialism, Christianity, or coltan, Africa has struggled to formulate a development agenda on its own terms. In this graduate seminar, participants will take up the task of defining and assessing notions of “development” through a range of academic literature, creative work, and practitioner discourse. Coursework involves classroom presentations, development of annotated bibliographies, and a final publication-ready paper.

983 The Question of Agency (3 credits)
(Cross listed: ANTHROPOLOGY 983, ECONOMICS 983, GEOGRAPHY 983, HISTORY 983, POLITICAL SCIENCE 983)
This graduate seminar provides a setting for participants to consider Africa – as an idea, a field of study, a place in the world, a subject for teaching – from a multi-disciplinary perspective. This semester, the course will focus on the concept of “agency” in order to consider not just what to think about the history, cultures, and politics of Africa but also how to think and teach about this part of the world in a politically, ethically-, and theoretically-informed way. While some “Africanist” scholarship has emphasized the structural conditions that limit the choices of African people—wherever they find themselves in the world—other scholarship has emphasized the choices that people have made in spite of, or within, various structural conditions. Some scholarship claims to recover or restore the agency of Africans within academic discourse. Yet still other scholarship assumes the agency of all people and focuses on the scope and scale of their choices in various times and places. Students in this seminar will read and discuss several key texts that have tackled the question of agency in order to refine their own understanding of the question and apply it to their own research and teaching. The semester will culminate in the composition and presentation of student research papers in which various answers to the question of agency are explored.

310 Archaeological Approaches to Egypt and The Near East (3 credits)

This course investigates the complex relationships between the ancient civilizations of Western Asia, North Africa, and the Mediterranean. The course begins with a brief introduction to the historical and archaeological records of Egypt, Mesopotamia, the Eastern Mediterranean/Aegean, and Syro-Palestine. Each region will then be examined in more detail using a series of case studies in contemporary approaches to interregional interaction. Students will explore the ways in which archaeologists study past cultural contact, with special attention to trade, ethnicity/immigration, and religious identity. Specific topics include: trade between early South Asia, the Near East, and Aegean; migration and ethnicities of the Hyksos, early Israelites, and Philistines; foreign relations in Biblical Judah and Israel; the Greek and Roman army in the Near East/Egypt; Jewish religious identities in the 1st century CE; Early Christian identity and liturgy; and Islamic pilgrimage.

861 Seminar – The History of Africa (1-3 credits)
This graduate seminar will examine the historical and anthropological literature on health, medicine, and healing in Africa. We will explore the creative and shifting ways in which Africans have sought to compose healthy communities through the expansion of therapeutic repertoires, the adaptation of deeply rooted ideas and practices, and the adoption and transformation of new technologies. We will also examine the ways in which different historical perspectives inform and transform our understanding of more contemporary developments, such as the emergence of medical humanitarianism and the flourishing of health-related non-governmental organizations in the Global South. Finally, we will consider the possibilities and potential pitfalls of deeper engagement by scholars working in Africa with those working on medicine, science, and related topics in other parts of the world.
