AFRICAN CULTURAL STUDIES
210 The African Storyteller
The oral tradition and the written word; the composition of stories, relationship between performer and audience, and transmission of tradition in various African societies. All coursework is online. There are no meetings or official office hours. Students read stories and introductory hypertext, watch lectures featuring Harold Schueb, complete quizzes, participate in discussion forums, and compose weekly practice essays. Coursework is synchronous, meaning that, while there is a great deal of flexibility, students must meet weekly deadlines. Major assessments include a midterm essay and a final research essay.

409 Topics In US And Global Black Music Studies
This course will introduce students to the phenomenon of "musical blackness" as a US-based, transnational cultural form and practice. In each class (topics will vary), students will learn about how US-based, racially specified black musical forms, together with global forms also identified as "black," were constituted as part of the legacies of European colonial encounter and US imperial expansion; the categories of "traditional" music and popular style took shape and have been experienced as something part and parcel of this historical process. By giving close consideration to genre, style, and performance practice, the course will help students to understand the many ways in which musical sound and social/political ideas are inextricably linked.
Radano, Ronald M.

813 Contemporary African And Caribbean Drama
Historical and critical study of the classics of contemporary African and Caribbean literary drama written in English. We will organize our survey around such interesting thematic issues as the African encounter with Europe, postcolonial disillusionment and the betrayal of ideals, and also stylistic matters as the relationship(s) between traditional drama and other performance forms, and modern drama written in European languages. We will also read theories and critical approaches to understanding the cross-continental drama traditions and their contexts. This course will encourage students to think about the long histories of cultural, performance, and theatrical relationships between Africa and the Caribbean and how the relationships have been shaped by race and economics, past and present. The course will promote critical thinking by challenging students to question conventional claims made by others and their own assumptions; it will invite students to think through the perspectives of others with empathy and respect, and stimulate analytical thinking about identity. Writers to be studied include Wole Soyinka, Derek Walcott, Aime Cesaire, Ama Ata Aidoo, Femi Osofisan, Sindiwe Magona, Mustapha Matura, and the Sistren Theatre Collective.
Tejumola Olaniyan

901 Seminar In Modern African Literature
The massive displacements of populations, the overthrow of old regimes and the punitive expansion of globalized neo-capitalist autocratic powers, etc. have prompted a drastic rethinking of knowledge production coming from the center. In this seminar, we will study some narratives (novels, films, street art, etc.) from Africa and its diaspora, in order to explore how they re-frame our research apparatuses by looking beyond canonical theories and methodologies, and contribute to a critical perspective beyond these dichotomies: Eurocentric and Third World fundamentalisms, nationalism and populism, ex-colonizer / colonized relationships, and the lingering effects of colonialism. We will also examine the ways they rethink class, gender, spiritual, linguistic, geographical, and racial hierarchies, as they are all entangled. In short, how these cultural productions offer new geographies of liberation that are able to “decolonize the minds” by suggesting alternative decolonial imagination?

983 Interdepartmental Seminar in Africa Studies
The idea of racial embodiment has powerfully informed the modern valuation of African and global-black cultural expression. Less understood, though, is what this “value” really is. Typically, observers perceive the embodied qualities of black creativity as a good thing, that “embodiment” marks a positive, aesthetic value. Yet embodied blackness has also historically carried a negative status, seeming tarnished in some quarters by its basis in the legacies of slavery and colonialism. Making matters more complicated, the signs of positive and negative valuation have typically worked together, their doubled, interwoven relation extending into the present day. If what early European ethnologists called “primitive” identified something negative, how and why did it also take positive meaning, orienting the “primitivist” cultural productions first celebrated in Europe, and later informing works of literature, film (black science fiction) and music (Nigerian Afrobeat, UK jungle, global-black hip hop)? Finally, how do we separate body-centered aesthetic measures from other value regimes? For example, how does the conspicuous presence of black embodied forms in global capitalism affect their aesthetic valuation?

AFRO-AMERICAN STUDIES
233 Global HipHop And Social Justice
Can HipHop culture help produce a more just world? If so, what theory and praxis best advance this aim? These are the questions that drive this conceptual course. Our critical interrogation of the relationship between HipHop and social justice considers the culture from its U.S. Black Power era underpinnings to its disparate contemporary "glocal" manifestations. We begin by asking what is "HipHop," what is "social justice," and what is their relationship, and proceed to consider how HipHop can be an effective force for social justice and what obstacles mitigate against this potential. These discussions will develop familiarity with important concepts in Black studies and social theory such as race and colonialism, imperialism and hegemony, structure and agency, identity and strategic essentialism. Weekly readings will typically pair writings specifically on HipHop with theory from across the humanities and social sciences including philosophy, sociology, cultural studies, and political economy. We will endeavor to consider the race/class/gender dimensions of our weekly topics. Students will acquire a broader familiarity with HipHop activism, and develop new conceptual tools and critical thinking skills.
